Darlene J. Curley EdD RN FAAN, Jeannie Hannan PhD, DipACLM, NBC-HWC

The role of Nurse policy makers is to be the voice of their constituents, develop and champion legislation to improve healthcare and advance the nursing profession. The 2020-2022 global pandemic has highlighted the critical importance of nurse leaders in policy and politics at the local, state, national and international levels.

In 2020-2022, there are 7,383 state legislators elected to serve in 50 states (National Conference of State Legislatures, 2021). How many of the 7,383 are nurse legislators? A January 2022 audit of State Legislatures found that there are currently 76 nurse legislators identified in 36 states. Of the current 76 State Nurse Legislators, 14 are senators; 62 are representatives; 37 are enrolled in the Democrat Party, 39 are enrolled in the Republican Party. Seventy three of the 76 are appointed to health-related committees, such as health & human services, public health, aging and elderly services, health insurance, health policy, healthcare finance & appropriations, mental health policy, healthcare reform, higher education, rehabilitation & social services, wellness, and discrimination prevention.

Fourteen states lack nurse policy makers: Alaska, Arizona, California, Florida, Hawaii, Illinois, Kansas, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, South Carolina, Tennessee, Utah, and Wyoming.
